“ My heart is compassed about with so many thoughts of the bond that we held, since our adolescent years. I reflect back to the phone calls where we would laugh & you would fuss & we would laugh all over again. Oh the laughter we shared! As time progressed and I left home for college, I recall telling you that I expected the calls still. Needless to say, we somehow managed to shelter our bond through the many facets of living. I always counted you as an older sister and you made certain I knew you were indeed the more knowledgeable one. Coming home was an excitement because I knew when we hooked up, it was on.

Coming home now will be different. I'm bracing my heart for the silence that I never had, because you were the lift, that echoed so much cheer. Though I must have expressed the joy you were to me countless times, I'm this moment, I am
